Chair's Corner

The academic environment attracts many strong personality types who shine in their independent work as well as in collaborative teams. However, when conflict arises in a department, it is important for leaders such as deans, department chairs, and committee leaders to understand their role in conflict management. The University of New Mexico's Faculty Dispute Resolution group provides an informative piece on the importance of recognizing conflict and offers a few strategies for tackling this problem.

Considerations When Selecting an Administrative Career Path

Have you ever considered extending your leadership to faculty and university issues? On January 20, 2010, ADVANCE invites you to a luncheon and an informal discussion with faculty administrators: Agnes Chan, Susan Powers-Lee, and Coleen Pantalone. Hear about how these women developed their career paths and participate in an open discussion where individual questions can be answered. We encourage those interested to RSVP here.

Let the Interviews Begin

As we move into another interviewing season, the following resources may be of help in making sure your department attracts and acquires the best talent possible.

An effective search committee starts with those who are best informed. Join us at our next and last STRIDE presentation on recruitment and retention on January 28, 2010, at 12:00pm (lunch included). Click here to RSVP.

In addition to the Recruitment Process, the University of Michigan's ADVANCE Handbook for Faculty Searches and Hiring provides an excellent resource for successful hiring practices. See the section on 'handling of campus visits' to learn how departments best represent themselves as places where women, minority, and all candidates can thrive.

Refer to the Northeastern HRM website for information on benefits to ensure your committee is well versed on the resources Northeastern has to offer incoming faculty. See the Provost's website for information on tenure clock policies and mentoring opportunities.

International Research Collaborations

We are conducting interviews with faculty who have/have not had experience in international research collaborations. If you are willing to participate, please email Dr. Guckenheimer.
